

Antifa ska, roadside raps, and unconquerable love in this week's Top 5 MN music videos

Tuesday, January 29, 2019 by Jerard Fagerberg in Music

Steel yourselves, Twin Cities. It's cold enough to kill out there.

This is the time of the year when newscasters and Twitter do-gooders remind you that, seriously folks, you gotta watch your ass out there. And for once those dingbats are right. It's so cold your nostrils will turn into crystal caves the moment you step out of the car.

I'm remiss to suggest you skip your outside plans, but if you can't muster the bravery to attend any shows this week, pay it back to those bands and enjoy some local music videos from the comfort of your warm, life-restoring bed.

Sleep Study – "Yourself Around" (PREMIERE)

That sweet vibration rumbling up from your basement isn't a faulty furnace, it's Minneapolis retro-rockers Sleep Study – the psychedelic four-piece seemingly find their home in dark, cozy hollows like that. They spent the last two years holed up at Simon Recordings, piecing together their new record Miss America, and now that they've laid their wavy tones to wax, they're out to find new spaces to warm. In the new video for "Yourself Around," the band and director Owen Rader show that those spaces could be as unassuming as the one right beneath your own feet.

